

Why not live dangerously for a change?

SHE'S SMART, BUT BORED. Then Sophie meets “Sam,” the police detective who depends on her professional skills at the Dorado Bay Public Library.

When she retires, he reluctantly hires her as a consultant only because she beat him to a murder scene and knows the victim. They awkwardly proceed to solve the crime with opposing techniques, uncovering a decades-old killing corporation and a religious cult, all in the same dysfunctional family.

SOPHIE REDESIGNED introduces a series where elder issues drive the plots and family ties are tested, including Sophie’s relationship with her son Robin, who thinks “active retirement” should not mean sneaking around the country for clues. Then there’s the problem of growing warmth between two senior citizens who are past their romantic prime. Or are they?

“...from the beginning to the end it was top-notch. ...Karen Dahood has a talent for bringing a fresh vibrant flare to a story without losing the deep mystery you look for.... one delicious read.”
